Cliveden House and estate

A country retreat on a grand scale, Cliveden's magnificent gardens and breathtaking river views have been admired for centuries. For 300 years, the lavish house was dedicated to the pursuit of pleasure, politics and power. In the early 20th century it became home to wealthy Waldorf and Nancy Astor, who hosted glittering parties and political gatherings here. In the 1960s Cliveden was still in the headlines for its association with the scandalous Profumo Affair.

Today everyone can enjoy Cliveden's 376 acres of formal gardens and parklands, which look down over the River Thames as it meanders between richly wooded cliffs. You can explore the woodlands on marked paths or wander amongst the formal gardens where you will see handsome statues from the ancient and modern worlds and fine floral displays in the beautifully restored parterre. In 2010, the National Trust began the task of planting 1,100 yew trees to recreate Cliveden's lost maze, which was originally designed by Lord Astor in 1894. The finished Maze is k Ug'cdYbYX in May 2011.

Taplow Court – Olympic history for a summer Sunday

Taplow Court, a mid 19th century mansion set high above the River Thames near Maidenhead, is another impressive house with an interesting past. At the turn of the 19th/20th centuries it was home to William Henry Grenfell, Lord Desborough of Taplow - the great all-round sportsman who became first chairman of the British Olympic Association and was the chief organiser of the 1908 London Olympic Games.

As a schoolboy William Grenfell showed early talent, setting the Harrow school mile record which stood for 60 years. At Oxford he was president of Oxford University Athletic Club and rowed twice in the Oxford and Cambridge Boat Race, including the famous dead heat of 1877. He swam across the base of Niagara Falls twice, the second time in a snowstorm, and climbed the Matterhorn three times. In 1906, he led the British team to the silver medal in Epee (fencing) at the Interim or Intercalated Olympic Games in Athens.

This great sporting character also served as president of the Epee Club, the Marylebone Cricket Club, the All England Lawn Tennis Club, the Amateur Fencing Association, the National Amateur Wrestling Association and the Amateur Athletic Association. His political career saw him as Member of Parliament for Salisbury, Hereford and High Wycombe and he was also Mayor of Maidenhead. Lord Desborough died in 1945 in his ninetieth year. Whilst living at Taplow Court, Lord Desborough and his wife Ettie hosted gatherings of the elite, aristocratic social group known as 'The Souls'. Their eldest son was the war poet Julian Grenfell, who was killed in 1915.

Taplow Court is now the home of SGI-UK, a lay Buddhist society. The house is open to the public from 10.00 – 17.00 on the first Sunday of June, July and August and for Heritage Open Days, which take place on the second weekend in September. On these days, guided tours are available to visitors. Cream teas are served in the canteen or you may picnic in 85 acres of grounds. The website will have details of any further openings planned during the period of the 2012 Olympics.
